

How this got made.

The Author's Note next to me explains what the booklet is. This sheet is about how it got made.

Two weeks, roughly

Week one. I re-read the interview five times. I marked the killer sentence on the second pass. I spent a day finding out which scoring platform the advisor had described. It was FrieslandCampina Foqus Planet. I thought about making a website but rejected it. A website would look like a startup pitch. A short film was also out. No time, and I am not a filmmaker.

Week two. I wrote the booklet. My first draft of the foreword was three times as long. I drew the coat of arms in TikZ. The first try looked Belgian. I built the statistics in a spreadsheet first so the numbers would reconcile, then typed them into LaTeX.

Things that broke

- The booklet imposition for free A4 printing rotated every page 90 degrees. `pdfpages booklet=true` fought with my `geometry landscape` option. I gave up and hand-listed the page order.
- Table B.5 once showed a total of -1.1 while the components summed to $+1.1$. I had to redo the totals so the table is internally consistent. A real audit would have caught this.
- Page 28 once had a single orphan paragraph. I tightened the prior page until the paragraph moved back.
- The Risks section once ended with a half-empty page. I wrote the Closing Remarks of the Director to fill it. That addition gave me a place to name what the three risks have in common. It is now one of my favourite pages.

Choices I am not sure about

- I centred the farm advisor and not the farmer. The advisor is the under-represented voice. But a farmer-voice booklet might have been more direct.
- I made the Authority a state body and not a cooperative federation. State framing reads as political but reproduces top-down recognition.
- Dutch checked by a friend, not by a native speaker who knows agricultural vocabulary. The technical terms may be off.
- The Director's voice may be too eloquent for plausibility. A real Director would be more guarded.

What I would like feedback on

Does the polish work for or against the critique? The conceit needs polish. A fake state document only works if it looks like one. But a polished critique of polished compliance regimes risks reproducing what it critiques. Section 7 is my attempt to put that doubt inside the booklet.
